The medical program will include three stages, from the NRE course to the practical feedback. The course will be a five-month program for senior nursing students and three month program for mid senior nursing students. On the first day, senior nursing students will be required to attend a one day NRE course which consists of theory such as nursing practice, medical terminology, nutrition and health promotion and basic nursing skills. The program also includes the integration of job placements in acute care, chronic and mental health settings. Finally, the third stage is the advanced NRE course, which will focus on clinical practice in hospitals. The NRE program will include both mandatory and elective feedback assignments. The minimum requirements for prospective nursing students are a GPA of 2.75 in the course of senior nursing science for senior students and a GPA of 3.0 in the course of mid senior nursing science for mid senior students. The National NRE has set another condition for domestic graduates who want to join the NRE course. Nursing graduates should have completed an additional practice year before applying for the NRE program, similar to the requirements of Australian colleges. The NRE program is an expansion of the PhD master of science in nursing course and the nurses who have completed this course will receive NRE classification on the basis of credits. Therefore, eligibility for provision to the senior nurse level will depend on the number of credits acquired in the NRE course and other requirements. The implementation of NRE is expected to start in 2025 and the total enrollment is estimated to be between 30,000 and 40,000. The included nurses in the NRE course and newly graduated nurses who are yet to pass the senior nurse exam, which is expected to occur in the same year. Click on the full story to view
